TO THE PRINTER.

The following entertaining and true ſtory (though perſonal) merits a place in your paper, and, whilſt it moves the paſſions, muſt give the higheſt pleaſure to every ſentimental reader.

AMONG all the vices that diſgrace human nature, none is more odious than ingratitude. The ancient ſages reckoned it the quinteſſence of all wickedneſs.--The man who was unthankful for favours received, they ſtigmatized as a monſter. The reaſoning brute that could forget his benefactor, they deemed an object of contempt and deriſion. But however deteſtable ingratitude is, no vice prevails more univerſally; and the man of yeſterday's obſervation will ſee, that thoſe on whom he laviſhes his moſt benign favours, generally returns evil for good, diſſimulation for ſincerity, and hatred for kindneſs.

I have always conſidered gratitude as the ſoul of virtue: And the man, whether in high or low life, whoſe heart is warmed with its genial rays, is an honour to human nature, and an heir of a happy immortality.

In Appian and other authors, I have read of the gratitude of lions and ſavage animals to their benefactors, and every recital of ſuch actions filled my breaſt with the love and veneration of this faireſt of eternal wiſdom's children; but the recollection of the following acts of gratitude in humble rational life, ever fills my ſoul with rapture and admiration.

During the Tory adminiſtration of Queen Anne, no courtier was more careſſed, adored, and raiſed to higher places of truſt, honour and preferment, than the noble Butler, Duke of Ormond. Her Majeſty had appointed him Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; and his Grace, in ſailing from Cheſter to Dublin, through a dangerous channel, was overtaken by a violent ſtorm, which drove them on the rocks of Angleſea, where they were wrecked; his Grace and only a few of his retinue, having with difficulty, ſaved their lives by ſwimming to land. That part of the iſland on which they were caſt, was cold, barren, and uncultivated. Having travelled ſome miles through a deſart, the firſt houſe they eſpied was the humble cottage of a poor curate. It conſiſted of a kitchen and bedchamber, both meanly furniſhed. The clergyman, on ſeeing his weather-beaten gueſts, knew them to be perſons of rank, and gave them a moſt welcome reception. Having kindled a ſwinging fire, he dried their wet garments, and ſet before them the beſt entertainment of the houſe. His frugal, though decent hoſpitality, charmed the Duke. He was tranſported to ſee ſo much ſolid contentment and unalloyed felicity poſſeſſed by his generous landlord. He aſked the curate what his yearly living was. Five pounds, replies Joſeph (for that was his name) but I have a notable wife, and, as we have two cows, we ſell their milk and butter, which almoſt ſupports us, and we reſerve the five pounds to buy cloaths, and for our children's education. Ormond, on his departure, promiſed to remember his hoſt, and his ſecretary gave Joſeph directions where he might find his gueſts, if ever he came to Dublin.

The curate waited long to hear of ſomething being done in his favour; but in vain. At laſt, rouſed by his wife, he reſolves to puſh his fortune, and, being properly equipped, he ſets out for the Iriſh metropolis. On his arrival, being a ſcholar, and a man of conſiderable abilities, he was readily admitted by the Dean to preach next Sunday forenoon before the Lord Lieutenant and both Houſes of Parliament. Having mounted the pulpit, he choſe that remarkable text, but the chief butler (his Grace's name was Butler) remembered not Joſeph, but forgot him. Here he painted the vice of ingratitude in the moſt ſtriking colours, and ſhewed the unhappy influence that high life has on the great, in making them forget the beneficent and humane actions done them by thoſe who dwell in the humble valley of obſcurity and indigence; and having deſcribed this criminal negligence towards their generous benefactors, he obſerved, "That this might ariſe, not ſo much from an innate depravity of heart, as from the multiplicity of ſtate offices in which they may be nobly employed, or from having their minds poiſoned by the bewitching flatteries of mercenary ſycophants, who ceaſe not to draw their attention from the amiable purſuits of humanity, juſtice and compaſſion, into thoſe of riot, intemperance, and debauchery." Having come to his application, he thus concluded: "And now, my honourable audience, let each of us turn our thoughts inward, and aſk ourſelves,---Did I ever receive a grateful, kind office from any one in a ſtation of life far inferior to mine, from one to whom all-bountiful heaven had not dealt out her common gifts with ſo liberal a hand as to me; but on whom ſhe had conferred more valuable bleſſings, an open, a generous heart? And have I forgotten ſuch generoſity? Have I neglected to reward it tenfold? Was I ever in my life expoſed to the rage of the mercileſs elements, when all nature ſeemed to conſpire for my deſtruction? Did I ever ſee my companions ſwallowed up in the devouring deep, and myſelf brought ſafe to land with a ſurviving few? And did any poor, but contented man, receive me and my ſhipwrecked aſſociates into his houſe, whilſt his active wife was employed in making a fire, and, with unaffected, decent ſimplicity, prepared a repaſt of plain, wholeſome food, to cheer our fainting ſpirits, and invigorate our cold drenched limbs, now ſafe from the dangers of the ſtormy main---who would not permit his gueſts to ſtir from our charitable dome, till clear ſerene ſkies, and genial ſunſhine, invited us to proceed on our journey? And have I, ungrateful man, ſuffered ſuch generous and diſintereſted benevolence of ſoul to paſs unnoticed and unrewarded? Have I ſuffered my benefactors to languiſh under the corroding ſcourge of friendleſs poverty, or to ſolicit charity's cold hand in vain?"

Ormond was all attention to this diſcourſe, and, on examination, found himſelf guilty of ſome pieces of criminal negligence perfectly ſimilar to thoſe now deſcribed; but conviction was brought home to his mind in a more forceable manner, when on recollecting the features and countenance of the preacher, he found him to be his kind and generous landlord of Angleſea, whom he had inhumanly forgot. Turning about to his ſecretary; "Is not this," ſays he, "Our honeſt friend Joſeph?" To which he replied, "Pleaſe your Excellency, I believe it is." "Invite him to dine with me." Joſeph being come into the Duke's preſence, told him, with thoſe ingenious bluſhes natural to an honeſt mind, that he was the poor curate of Angleſea, whoſe welcome gueſt the Duke once was: That he ſeemed to have this ſingle chance in his whole life to make his fortune, and that he came to remind his Excellency of his promiſe to provide for him. "You are a deſerving, worthy, honeſt man," replies his Grace, and immediately ordered the vacancies of the church to be ſearched: Only one living of ſmall value was found vacant. "There is none ſo meritorious as our generous hoſt," and inſtantly promoted him from 5l. a year to 300l.

But, alas, how ſhort-lived is all human bliſs! How quick the tranſitions of fortune! How ſmall confidence can be placed on Princes, or the ſons of men! At the acceſſion of George I. Ormond was diveſted of all his places, fled to eſcape a trial for his life, and his whole fortune was ſeized by the Crown. For ſome time the liberality of his friends ſupported him, but this was anon withdrawn; and the once all-great and all-mighty Generaliſſimo of England became a forlorn fugitive, inviroued with all the dreary horrors of want, oppreſſion, poverty, and contempt. But how was his heart rejoiced to find a generous and ample ſupply from an unexpected quarter, even from his old landlord Joſeph. This grateful man hearing of the Duke's great misfortunes, thought it the leaſt part of his duty to relieve, out of his beneficence, the neceſſities of his great and good patron, to whom he owed all his living. "My deareſt," ſays he to his wife, "Do you hear of the great wants, and deep diſtreſſes, of our noble benefactor, who raiſed us to our preſent affluent ſtate. You know we can live as well on a 100l. a-year as on a 1000l. what if we ſhould ſettle 200l. a year on our generous patron for life, for I hear his friends have forgot him, and he is in danger of periſhing for hunger and want." Joſeph's wife heartily conſented to the propoſal, and a year's ſalary was remitted to the Duke. Aſtoniſhed at this ſecond act of kindneſs, his Grace wrote a particular detail of it to a nobleman at Court, who, though a zealous partizan of another faction, ever after maintained a ſtrict and inviolate friendſhip with him. By his intereſt Joſeph was preferred to a ſecond living worth 500l. per annum; but before his promotion took place, the brave Duke of Ormond died in exile; ſo that Joſeph could no longer relieve the wants, nor alleviate the misfortunes of his noble patron: For he was gone down to that land of ſilence and reſt, where the oppreſſor and the oppreſſed meet together---and his ſoul had winged its way to thoſe pure regions, where wealth and riches are accounted contemptible trifles, where titles and dignities are trampled on with ſcorn, and where virtue alone is exalted and ennobled with diſtinguiſhing and eternal bays.

PHILARETES.

The PLEASURES and ADVANTAGES of INDUSTRY.

THE evils inſeparably annexed to the preſent condition of man, are ſo numerous and afflictive, that it has been, from age to age, the taſk of ſome to bewail, and of others to ſolace them; and he, therefore, will be in danger of ſeeming a common enemy, who ſhall attempt to depreciate the few pleaſures and felicities which nature has allowed us.

Yet I will confeſs, that I have ſometimes employed my thoughts in examining the pretentions that are made to happineſs, by the ſplendid and envied conditions of life; and have not thought the hour unprofitably ſpent, when I have detected the impoſture of counterfeit advantages, and found diſquiet lurking under falſe appearances of gaiety and greatneſs.

It is aſſerted, by a tragic poet, that "no man is miſerable, "but as he is compared with others happier than himſelf:" This poſition is not ſtrictly and philoſophically true. He might have ſaid, with ſtrict propriety, that no man is happy, but as he is compared with the miſerable; for ſuch is the ſtate of this world, that we find in it abſolute miſery, but happineſs only comparative; we may incur as much pain as we can poſſibly endure, though we can never obtain as much happineſs as we might poſſibly enjoy.

Yet it is certain likewiſe, that many of our miſeries are merely comparative; we are often made unhappy, not by the preſence of any real evil, but by the abſence of ſome fictitious good; of ſomething which is not required by any real want of nature, which has not in itſelf any power of gratification, and which neither reaſon nor fancy would have prompted us to wiſh, did we not ſee it in the poſſeſſion of others.

For a mind diſeaſed with vain longing after unattainable advantages, no medicine can be preſcribed, but an impartial enquiry into the real worth of that which is ſo ardently deſired. It is well known how much the mind, as well as the eye, is deceived by diſtance; and perhaps it will be found, that of the very many imagined bleſſings, it may be doubted, whether he that wants or poſſeſſes them has more reaſon to be ſatisfied with his lot.

The dignity of high birth, and long extraction, no man, to whom nature has denied it, can confer upon himſelf; and therefore, it deſerves to be conſidered, whether the want of that which can never be gained, may not eaſily be endured. It is true, that if we conſider the triumph and delight with which moſt of thoſe recount their anceſtors, who have anceſtors to recount, and the artifices by which ſome, who have riſen to unexpected fortune, endeavour to inſert themſelves into an honourable ſtem, we ſhall be inclined to fancy, that wiſdom or virtue may be had by inheritance, or that all the excellencies of a line of progenitors are accumulated on their deſcendants. Reaſon, indeed, will ſoon inform us, that our eſtimation of birth is arbitrary and capricious, and that dead anceſtors can have no influence but upon imagination: Let it then be examined, whether one dream may not operate in the place of another; whether he that owes nothing to fore-fathers, may not receive equal pleaſure from the conſciouſneſs of owing all to himſelf; whether he may not, with a little meditation, find it more honourable to found than to continue a family, and to gain dignity than tranſmit it; whether, if he receives no dignity from the virtues of his family, he does not likewiſe eſcape the danger of being diſgraced by their crimes; and whether he that brings a new name into the world, has not the convenience of playing the game of life without a ſtake, an opportunity of winning much, though he has nothing to loſe.

If every man were wiſe and virtuous, capable to diſcern the beſt uſe of time, and reſolute to practiſe it; it might be granted, I think, without heſitation, that total liberty would be a bleſſing; and that it would be deſirable to be left at large to the exerciſe of religious and ſocial duties, without the interruption of important avocations.

But ſince felicity is relative, and that which is the means of happineſs to one man, may be to another the cauſe of miſery, we are to conſider what ſtate is beſt adapted to human nature, in its preſent degeneracy and frailty. And ſurely, to far the greater number it is highly expedient, that they ſhould, by ſome ſettled ſcheme of duties, be reſcued from the tyranny of caprice; that they ſhould be driven on, by neceſſity, through the paths of life, with their attention confined to a ſtated taſk, that they may be leſs at leiſure to deviate into miſchief, at the call of folly.

No man can be happy in total idleneſs: He that ſhould be condemned to lie torpid and motionleſs, "would fly for recreation, ſays South, to the mines and the gallies;" and it is well, when nature or fortune find employment for thoſe, who would not have known how to procure it for themſelves.

He whoſe mind is engaged by the acquiſition or improvement of a fortune, not only eſcapes the inſipidity of indifference, and the tedioufneſs of inactivity, but gains enjoyments wholly unknown to thoſe, who live lazily on the toil of others; for life affords no higher pleaſure, than that of ſurmounting difficulties, paſſing from one ſtep of ſucceſs to another, forming new wiſhes, and ſeeing them gratified. He that labours in any great or laudable undertaking, has his fatigues firſt ſupported by hope, and afterwards rewarded by joy; he is always moving towards a certain end, and when he has attained it, an end more diſtant invites him to a new purſuit.

It does not, indeed, always happen, that diligence is fortunate; the wiſeſt ſchemes are broken by unexpected accident; the moſt conſtant perſeverance ſometimes toils, through life, without a recompence; but labour, though unſucceſsful, is more eligible than idleneſs: He that proſecutes a lawful purpoſe, by lawful means, acts always with the approbation of his own reaſon; he is animated, through the courſe of his endeavours, by an expectation which, though not certain, he knew to be beſt; and is at leaſt comforted in his diſappointment, by a conſciouſneſs that he has not failed by his own fault.

That kind of life is moſt happy, which affords us moſt opportunities of gaining our own eſteem; and what can any man infer in his own favour, from a condition to which however proſperous, he contributed nothing, and which the vileſt and weakeſt of the ſpecies would have obtained by the ſame right, had he happened to be the ſon of the ſame father?

To ſtrive with difficulties, and to conquer them, is the higheſt human felicity; the next is to ſtrive, and deſerve to conquer: But he whoſe life has paſſed without a conteſt, and who can boaſt neither ſucceſs nor merit, can ſurvey himſelf only as a uſeleſs filler of exiſtence; and if he is content with his own character, muſt owe his ſatisfaction to inſenſibility.

What ſtate of life admits moſt happineſs, is uncertain; but that uncertainty ought to repreſs the petulance of compariſon, and ſilence the murmurs of diſcontent.

MEMOIRS of Dr. LUCAS.

THE late Dr. Charles Lucas was a gentleman of unblemiſhed honour, and endued with every virtue that could adorn a public ſtation. As a phyſician, he was eminent, humane, and charitable; and as a Senator, unbiaſſed in judgment, invariable in conduct, and incorruptible in integrity.---In the year 1749, he was voted an enemy to his Country, by a vaſt majority of the moſt abandoned Parliament [illegible] Laws (except the preſent) and, like Coriolanus, became an exile, for having juſtly merited the thanks and approbation of all his Fellow Subjects. Several years elapſed, during which he improved his medical knowledge, and became eminent in that profeſſion.---In the year 1761, he returned to his native country, in conſequence of a Noli Proſequi, obtained from his preſent Majeſty, and a vacancy happening at the ſame time for the City of Dublin, by a diſſolution of the Parliament, on the demiſe of the late King, he was elected a Member for that City, by the grateful ſuffrages of a loyal and free people, who were acquainted with his ſufferings, and had the moſt unreſerved confidence in his patriotic virtues. He then entered on the theatre of public life, and has ever ſince continued to diſcharge his duty to his Conſtituents, with a firmneſs not to be relaxed; with an integrity, not to be paralleled; and with an intrepidity, not to be imitated. He remained unmoved amidſt every change of Government, and every revolution of Politics, and perſiſted to the laſt moment of his life in an avowed deteſtation of tyranny and injuſtice; and a love to his country, which no threats could diminiſh, nor bribes could purchaſe. In the midſt of venalty and corruption, unplaced, unbribed, and unpenſioned, he ſtemmed the torrent of abuſe, the oppoſition of party, and the frowns of power. He was the Palladium of conſtitutional Liberty in that kingdom, and one of thoſe few friends to the Public, who have kept the promiſes made to their conſtituents, through all temptations of advancement, and every ſiniſter artifice of Miniſterial Craft, or Vice-royal influence.

On the DEATH of Dr. LUCAS.

ALAS! poor CHARLES! the Friend of Freedom dies!
Go! Patriots; celebrate his Obſequies!
Staunch to his Country and her glorious cauſe;
Rever'd his King, but honour'd more the laws.
True to his truſt, unbiaſs'd,---ſtill the ſame;
No bribes could purchaſe, and no threats could tame.
Of Court corruption, long oppos'd the tide,
A thorn in ev'ry wicked ſtateſman's ſide;
Foe to temptation, and each guilty Son,
From Sancho up to gouty Harrington.
Abhorr'd the venal Courtier's flatt'ring tribe,
Alike deſpis'd the perſon, and the bribe,
By fools derided, honour'd by the brave,
Lov'd by the free---deteſted by the ſlave.
No gift, inſidious, e'er his conſcience ſtain'd;
And when the heights of human glory gain'd,
Death ſwept him from his bleeding country's ſide;---
He felt her wounds;---he ſorrow'd, and he dy'd.

ADVICE TO THE LADIES.

'TIS not the ruby lip and ſparkling eye,
Can raiſe a paſſion that ſhall never die;
Beauty, the brighteſt, is the fraileſt flow'r,
To what amounts its weak, but boaſted pow'r?
Perhaps ſome giddy, thoughtleſs youth to warm,
While bloom the graces of the lovely form:
But, ah! how ſhort the pride of beauty laſts,
Which ends with youth, and pain or ſickneſs blaſts!
Be then adviſ'd betimes, ye young and fair,
And let ſublimer charms engage your care;
With ev'ry grace of mind attempt to ſhine,
With virtue ſenſe, with beauty ſweetneſs join:
With theſe adorn'd, when beauty is no more,
You ſtill to charm ſhall have the pleaſing pow'r:
And not a ſmile ſhall be beſtow'd in vain,
But laſting as your worth ſhall be your reign.

Lord NORTH's SOLILOQUY.

THIS untractable haughtiness of the muley Spaniard crosses all my purposes---it overturns all my intentions, and puts an end to all my hopes.----Every thing went as I wished before, and I thought myself rivetted in power.---My late glorious conquest in the City, through the junction of the Shelburne party, placed me above all opposition at home; and my convention with Spain had, I imagined, secured the peace abroad.---But the perverse and obstinate proceeding of the proud Spaniard hath ruined all, and thrown me into despair.---It will certainly be my downfall----I cannot prevent it.----If the peace is broke, my place is gone-----there is no stopping the clamour of the nation, who already cry aloud for war.----I should be for war too, and would, with joy, humble the intolerable pride of Spain, could I but preserve my station.---But it is impossible---my place must be gone, if a war happens.---I must therefore prevent it, at all events, if I can.-----Any pretence will pass with G------e, he wants peace as much as me.----I will apply again to the French Ministry, and implore their good offices---they may perhaps prevail upon the Spaniard again to stop any further hostilities, and to make some plausible excuse for what they have done.----The Spanish guarda costas may be said to have acted contrary to the orders of their Court.-----Such an acknowledgment would be fully sufficient.---France may be able to bring this about.----But then the Treasury is not at present fit for the purpose.-----It will occasion a great deficiency------but if it does, our majority will make it good, without an enquiry into the cause of it.----G----- will approve of the expedient.----It must be done.----We must, however, wear at present an hostile appearance, put a number of ships into commission, and have a respectable fleet before meeting of Parliament, as if a war was unavoidable.---This will be an excellent handle for keeping up the land-tax at 4s. and also for laying on some other taxes.---By these means we shall be able to satisfy our good friends the French, for their kind interposition, and also to stop the mouths of prating men in the House.-----As to the clamours of the people without doors, we may call them the murmurs of the mob, and despise them, like the barking of so many dogs.-----This is our only way, and I will immediately send for Jemmy Twitcher and Lord Falkland to consult about it.

ANECDOTE.

A Caution to the Avaricious.

WHEN Soladin the great Emperor of the Turks was dying, he commanded no solemnity should be used at his funeral, but that only his shirt, in the manner of an ensign, made fast to the point of a lance, should be carried before his dead body, and a plain priest going before and crying thus aloud to the people, "Soladin, Conqueror of the east, of all the greatness and riches he had in this life, carrieth with him after his death nothing more than his shirt to the grave."

ANECDOTE.

WHEN General S---t (a gentleman who has been as remarkably lucky at the hazard table, as unlucky in a late marriage) was determined on marrying his present lady, he consulted Lord M---l---d, who is his relation, about the propriety of the match. Seeing it was a point he was determined on, my Lord was some time for waving his opinion; but being pressed very close by the other, he replied, "Why then, General, I would have you put the matter entirely out of your head, for two reasons: The one is, the probability of your being cuckolded by some of the Macaroni; and the other, that being the case, you will never be able to recover damages, as you have already taken care to strip them of the means."

LONDON, November 19.

Extract of a letter from Paris, November 4.

"THEY write from Rennes, that on the 22d of last month, the day on which the Members of that Parliament had received orders to come there, great numbers of them arrived, and after mature deliberation, all of them [illegible] against whatever should be attempted [illegible] were joined in the same manner. In the afternoon of that day, the Duke de Fitz-James, and Mr. Ballard, Counsellor of State, arrived, and orders were given in the night for the Parliament to meet the 25th. The gates of the Palace were locked and guarded, that no persons, except those who had a right, might go in. As soon as the Parliament met, the Duke de Fitz-James said, that he came there in obedience to the King's commands, and to execute some orders which Mr. Bastard would explain to them. This Mr. Bastard proceeded to do, and did not spare to tell them, that the behaviour of the Parliament, and the disturbances in the province, which many of the Members had contributed to, had brought upon them their disgrace. When he had finished his speech, some arrets of suppression were read, and the Members would have entered into debate; but letters de catchet were delivered to them, forbidding them so to do. Afterwards some erasements were made, the above proceedings were registered, when the Members went home; were other letters de catchet were sent to them, ordering them not to stir out, nor see any body at home till further orders. On the 26th, the Magistrates of the Parliament received letters of exile, except 27 of them, who make part of the new Parliament; the edict for the creation of which was registered the same day, in an Assembly which met for that purpose, and consisted of 60 Magistrates."

Letters from France mention, that by an estimate of the number of Officers and Members of Parliament exiled from the different Parliaments of that kingdom, they do not amount to less than 700.

It is said that the seizures made since the 1st of June last on the coast of Great-Britain and Ireland, amount to upwards of 90,000l. The smugglers from the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, taken by his Majesty's cutters in the course of this year, have been computed to exceed the value of 40,000.

We are assured that there was lately a sharp altercation between the Premier and the Lord Sandwich, respecting our present disgraceful submission to the injurious treatment of Spain; when the First Lord of the Admiralty nobly declared, that should the next advices from Admiral Rodney not be in every respect satisfactory, and war was not instantly declared, he would certainly resign. He said he gloried in being in the service of his King and Country; but that he would not remain at the head of the Admiralty of England, and see the British Flag insulted with impunity by Spain.

By a private letter from a capital house in Amsterdam, we are informed, that it is currently reported in that city, that the Regent of Persia has declared war against the English, in consequence of which two English vessels have been seized in the Gulph of Persia.

Almost all the three decked ships at Chatham and Sheerness are to join Admiral Rodney on the Jamaica station with all expedition.

His Majesty has ordered exact lists to be made out of all the pensions and sinecures in Great-Britain and Ireland, and they are to be laid before him with all possible speed in order to be reduced.

Superstitious people consider it as a judgment, that his Majesty should owe his greatest uneasiness to the same family of the Luttrell's, who have been made the instruments of the greatest wrong to the People.

A letter from Senegal mentions, that a crew of pirates in an armed schooner, who had committed divers robberies on the coast, finding themselves pursued by an English man of war, and that it was impossible to escape her, blew themselves up, by setting fire to the powder room, and every one on board perished.

By a gentleman just arrived from Dublin, we are informed that Dr. Lucas, the late celebrated Irish patriot, died so poor that, like a second Aristides, his family must be taken care of at the public expence.----A rare instance of modern patriotism, when it is well known he has often refused 1000l. a year pension for himself, and a majority for his eldest son, who has been living ever since the last peace on Lieutenant's half pay.

Translation of a letter from Civita Vecchia.

"Yesterday a felucca arrived here from Corsica. I have only time, by this post, to send you the following extraordinary intelligence: Next week you shall receive intelligence still more extraordinary, that will surprize you much.

"At Olitta, nine French soldiers, three weeks past, found an old peasant, in appearance past seventy, in a cottage in this place, much wounded, and in company with his two daughters, who anxiously attended the critical situation of his health; but doubting he was wounded in a skirmish with the French troops, they compelled the eldest of the daughters to shoot the father when bound to a chesnut-tree, and afterwards murdered the two daughters.

At Sangalina, three Corsican girls, about nine years of age, were hanged up by their feet in the market-place, by order of a French Major, for having cried, Viva il nostro Generale Illustrissimo Signor Paoli. Having hung an hour, by order of the officer, their throats were cut, and they were suffered to hang bleeding the rest of the day.

"At Pastorecchia, a father and son being returned to this place, after the last skirmish with the French, and much wounded, a party of French soldiers immediately seized the father and son, and put them into chains. The next morning they compelled the father, before a multitude of Corsican peasants, to fire at his son, aged 31 years, who was instantly shot through the body.

"At Crucciaci, a Corsican priest, worn out with age, and much wounded, was found by a French officer and his party near this town; they immediately cut off the old man's legs, plucked out his tongue by the roots, stuck his eyes full of pins, and filled his mouth with pebbles; leaving the mutilated body upon the road.

"At Vescovato, a decrepid peasant, with every mark of venerable old age, supported by his son, a youth of 20, passing through this town, were last week seized for spies; the old man was blind, the son deaf and dumb. These objects of universal charity were by French penetration instantly dubbed spies. The unfortunate youth was instantly beheaded, and his head placed in the hands of venerable old age, and who was immediately hung upon a tree.

"The French threaten there shall be an avenue formed with Corsican bodies, from Bastia to Florenzo; nor is it to be doubted, for they have distributed two thousand scalping knives among their troops, with a premium of twenty livres for every Corsican scalp. A brilliant proof of the politeness and humanity of the most refined nation in Europe, as the French stile themselves, and who first taught the savage Americans the use of the scalping knife; who taught barbarity to the most inhuman of savages!"

NOVEMBER 21. We are told, that one Mr. Bulkely, of Castle Nock, near Dublin, has discovered upon his estate a rich mine of jewels, which nearly resembles the marcasite, and for brilliancy by candle-light, equal an adamant. It promises to turn out to great advantage, as the like stone was never seen in England, and the gentleman has been offered twelve thousand pounds for the mine.

Extract of a letter from Dublin, November 2.

"On Thursday, after two o'clock, the remains of the late Dr. Lucas, a citizen in parliament for Dublin, were carried from his house in Henry-street to St. Michan's church, in the most solemn and grand manner, preceded and attended by the most numerous crowds of people ever known in this kingdom. The coffin was covered with black velvet, and richly adorned with clasps and hinges of silver, double-gilt. The pall had on it plumes of black feathers, and borders of escutcheons in black and white silk, with a cock in the center, being the Doctor's crest. The order of the procession was as follows:

All in their respective habits, and with scarfs and hatbands.
Making in the whole upwards of 2000.

"The procession went from Henry-street, thro' Mary-street and Capel-street, over Ess x Bridge, up Parliament-street, along Castle-street, Skinner-row, High-street, down New-row and Bridge-street, over the Old Bridge, and along Church-street to St. Michan's church; taking that round to satisfy the eager desire of the people in general, who were anxious to pay the last tribute of their tears to their protector, their friend, and their representative.

"So great a number of noblemen and gentlemens carriages were never seen together before in Dublin, as upon this occasion; and notwithstanding the innumerable crowds of people in all the streets and passages, not one person received the least hurt. The funeral procession, from the house in Henry-street to the church-yard, was more than two hours in passing.

"We hear that Mr. Cunningham is modelling a design for a monument to the memory of the late Dr. Lucas: the design of which is the statue of Liberty letting fall her staff, and exhibiting a basso-relievo on a shield, representing the Doctor defending Hibernia from oppression, with other emblems, &c. the expence of which will not exceed 300l.

NOVEMBER 23. A Mr. B------ is arrived from Bengal, who is said to have amassed above one hundred thousand pounds by a monopoly of rice; and to which monopoly, it is said, was chiefly owing the late terrible and affecting famine in that country, by which nearly 100,000 unhappy people lost their lives.---Who would wish the enjoyment of riches at such a price?

Yesterday a Custom-house Officer was taken up by a warrant, and brought before Justice Fielding, for beating a young fellow who was driving his cart along the Strand. The Officer pretended to have had an information laid against the cart for run goods, but to his great surprize found a trusty servant of a dog in the cart, who would not let the plunderer rifle his master's property in the street. The Officer followed the cart till it put up at the inn, when he took out a trunk belonging to a gentleman, which contained nothing more than the wearing apparel belonging to the gentleman and his lady, which was carried to the Custom-house. But finding nothing to answer their purpose, the trunk, with its contents, was sent back again, and the Officer gave bail to appear next sessions at Hicks's-Hall.

Early this morning, about one hundred and fifty prisoners under sentence of transportation, were taken from Newgate, and conducted on board a lighter at Black-friars to be carried down the river, and shipped on board the vessel that is to take them to America. There were amongst these unhappy wretches, two carts loaded with sick, whose stench in particular affected many persons, and may probably produce a milignant disorder.

NOVEMBER 28. On Friday some dispatches were transmitted to all the British Consuls in the different parts of the Mediterranean.

Sunday morning sailed from Spithead the Portland of 50 guns, Captain Sterling, for Antigua, having on board Sir Ralph Payne, Governor of the Leeward Islands, his lady and family.

The Lords of the Admiralty have purchased of Mr. Hammond, of Hull, two new North country ships, from 460 to 350 tons burthen, in order to fit them for the accommodation of Mr. Banks, &c. for the next exploring voyage to the South-Seas. They are now fitting out at Deptford and Woolwich yards, and will be ready to sail by next March.

NOVEMBER 30. A letter from Sunderland, after mentioning the damages done there and in places adjacent, by the late floods, adds, "Thirty-four ships were wrecked on Sunderland Bar, and on the North and South Sand. Many men and boys were drowned, three colliers are filled with water, one engine is entirely ruined, and others much damaged; and out of 700 keels belonging to the river Wear, not 100 are found in a state of safety. Nineteen houses were washed away at Briggate, Barnard Castle. Lord Ravensworth has sent 100 guineas to the Church-wardens in Gateshead, to be distributed among the poor sufferers by the flood in that parish."

A noble Lord, well known in the sporting world, was agreeably surprized the other morning when settling with his banker; he found the sum of 11,000l. carried to his credit, over what cash he imagined was in their hands. Upon enquiring into it, he found it was a deposit his father made there some years ago, which he had forgot mentioning in his will.

It is said that the consumption of malt made in England and Wales, by a late moderate computation, by brewers, distillers, innholders, and publicans (exclusive of private families) amounts to upwards of 3,125,000 quarters annually.

DECEMBER 5. The merchants and ship owners at Granville, upon a representation to the French King, have obtained leave to trade from that port directly to the French settlements in the West-Indies.

We hear that a petition to Parliament is preparing, for the obtaining relief against state oaths, particularly those of allegiance, abjuration, and supremacy; by the obtrusion of which, many tender, scrupulous consciences among our worthy Jacobitical brethren, are hindered from getting into his Majesty's cabinet councils, and from accomplishing their generous designs towards the restoration of the injured and oppressed family of Stuart. And not only so, but many learned and pious members of the Church of Rome, are either subjected to the charge of prevarication, or else effectually prevented from holding any temporal or ecclesiastical preferment among us, to the great scandal of a nation professing a regard for civil and religious liberty.

We hear, says a correspondent, that Old Simon, father-in-law to a great Personage, will shortly be appointed to a very lucrative post in the kingdom of Ireland.

We hear, as a well known truth, that the late Justice Tashmaker, who died lately of the small-pox on Epping-forest, offered his physician who attended him 3000l. to save his life.

Yesterday morning a young lady, niece to an eminent merchant in this city, with a fortune of 17,000l. at her own disposal, set out for France with one of her uncle's clerks.

ST. GEORGE, (Grenada) JANUARY 11.

On Friday the 27th December last, about eleven o'clock at night, a most dreadful fire broke out in a bake-house at the end of Halifax-street, in the most leeward part of this town, owing to the bursting of an over-heated oven, and not to any other cause as has been reported. Upon the first alarm the General and garrison repaired to the spot; but as the little wind that happened to blow was northerly, and there being, at the same time, an almost total want of every implement necessary for extinguishing or stopping the progress of fire, the flames spread in all directions, with such rapidity, as to lay the whole lower town in ashes, in less than five hours. It was at length happily extinguished, after it had several times seized the Custom-house and Council-house on the top of the Hill, and Mr. de Chanteloup's house in the Carenage; and had not those houses been providentially saved, the destruction of the whole town, and very probably, of the shipping in the harbour, must inevitably have ensued. His Excellency exerted his utmost efforts, and every where animated the people by his presence and example on this melancholy occasion, and the officers and soldiers of the 70th regiment, tho' their spirited endeavours were in vain, behaved in such a manner as will ever reflect honour on them, and claim the gratitude of the inhabitants; but the unhappy sufferers were woefully disappointed in the assistance they had reason to expect from Admiral Mann, who, at the distance of about three quarters of a mile, lay a spectator of their destruction, with a ship of the line and two frigates under his command. Indeed, when the fire was almost at an end, there were at last sent an officer and thirty men, who tho' without any implements, conducted themselves with such boldness, activity, and success, in stopping the still farther progress of the flames, as clearly evinced, that had two hundred been timeously dispatched to our assistance, the greatest part of the town might have been preserved. We have not yet heard any good reasons assigned for this fatal neglect.

It is with the greatest satisfaction, we can mention on this occasion, the singular humanity of the principal inhabitants, whose generous subscriptions and immediate attention to the means of furnishing their distressed fellow citizens with the necessaries of life, deserve the highest encomiums. Providentially for us a number of vessels have lately arrived with provisions and lumber, and many more are hourly expected, which affords the pleasant prospect that our markets will be plentifully supplied, and tends greatly to alleviate the general distress.

A fine LOT for Sale by private Contract, viz.

THAT valuable LOT of LAND in Charles-Town, known or distinguished in the plan or model thereof, by the No. 191, situated at the west end and on the north side of Tradd-street, between the houses of Alexander Fraser, Esq; and the late Captain Thomas Elliott, deceased, containing in front on said street, fifty-eight feet, eight inches, or thereabouts, with the advantage of a passage; and in depth one hundred and forty-three feet, or thereabouts; whereon is a BRICK HOUSE designed for Kitchens or two tenements that were intended to be built, and will still serve those purposes. This Lot has a fine south prospect of Ashley-River, and as the proprietor of the opposite lot may perhaps make his front on Friend-street to be uniform with the other houses built at the south end and west side of that street, with the garden running east and west, there will be no obstruction to the southerly air from Ashley-River, which must be very agreeable in the hot months, and may prevent the communication of any malignant distemper that may rage in the interior parts of the town, or contagion arising from noxious effluvia. Its vicinity also to several good landing places on Ashley-River, particularly the Sugar-House-Creek, where a public market will no doubt be soon established, will greatly enhance the value of all lands in that part of the town; also being situated in an excellent neighbourhood of reputable inhabitants, renders it not only more eligible, but secure against the danger of fire; and being a vacant lot, the purchaser will have the satisfaction of erecting buildings thereon according to his own taste for pleasure or profit; the area or ground plot admitting either of one large mansion house of twelve rooms, or to be divided into two tenements of six rooms each, with land sufficient behind for a kitchen garden to each. And, as houses in that airy and pleasant part of the town are seldom or ever empty, it will afford a certain good income quarterly.

The purchaser may have one, two, three, or four years credit, giving bond, with approved personal security, and paying the interest punctually every year, and if he chuses it, one third or one fourth part of the principal will be received annually, by which instalments, the purchase money will be easily and insensibly sunk.
